I spent the summer in 2005 in the LDR. From learning to discriminate male flies from female ones, collecting virgins every day, setting cross, taking photos with light microscope to presenting the data, the incident that I remember most vividly was the attack by MITES!! All of us had to check each vial to ensure it was mite-free before moving the vials back to the cleaned fly room. It was really tiring to look through the microscope for a long time. Seeing those disgusting mites climbing on the fly egg drove me crazy. It required all the LDRians to cooperate to get rid of the mites.

Thank you Dr. Chan for the opportunity to work in the LDR. Thank you Fat Chan for advice and support. Thank you Mr. Chan for the fly food. Sorry for occupying the microscope for a long time as I was not fast enough...: P

Thank you everyone for laughter and memory given to me during the summer.
